General

INDEX

TO THE

TENTH VOLUME

OF THE

SOUTHERN QUARTERLY REVIEW.

A

Allowan, notice of it, 514.

American system discussed, 174—227; Mr. Clay its father, 175; the same as the British colonial system, 177; Mr. Clay's account of its operation on the North and West, 189; So. Carolina ever consistent in her opposition to it, 193; injurious effects of the restrictive system in Russia, 196; in France, 197; duty on wool, 201; protection in favor of sugar, 203; tariff of 1816, how passed, 209; independence of other nations a futile idea, 219;

Animal Magnetism, by T. Leger, noticed, 255;

Argentine Republic, King's Twenty-four years in, noticed, 255.

Arnold, Dr. Thomas his introductory lecture on modern history reviewed, 128—148.

B

Barrow, Sir John, his account of Artic voyages of discovery, noticed, 247.

Bœhr, Dr. C. F. his History of Roman Literature, reviewed 352–376.

Boarding out, a tale, noticed, 250.

C

Calhoun, J. C., his report on the memorial of the Memphis Convention, reviewed, 377, the power of Congress to appropriate money, early discussed, 379; Mr. C's views on this question, 381; taxes a gain to the manufactures, 386; presidential veto cannot arrest the internal improvement policy, 390; Mr. C's measures to defeat it, 394; the power regulating commerce examined, [illegible]; Mr. C's argument against appropriations for harbors, 404; his views of river improvements, 407; their views examined, 408; his argument for the Mississippi, 413; the effect of his construction, 414; his report on the Memphis memorial further reviewed, 451; his declarations at that convention variously received in So. Carolina, ib; remarks of the correspondent of the Mercury, 442; examination of his argument in favor of the Mississippi, 445; his argument from the power of Congress to regulate commerce, 458; 10th sect of the constitution, 479; the States competent in themselves to improve the Mississippi, 489; loose constructions of the constitution, 496; Mr C's former opinions, 500; partial legislation of Congress, 504; editor's note on this subject, 515.

Carlyle, Thomas, his letters and speeches of Cromwell reviewed, 258, Carlyle's style, 253; his purpose in writing this book, 260; his opinion of other biographers, 264; his description of the assassination of Buckingham, 278; of Hampden's trial, 380.

Crichton, by Ainsworth, noticed, 249.

Clay, Mr., his speeches on the American system reviewed, 174—227.

Clay, Mr, his speeches on the American system reviewed, 174—227.

Confessions of a Pretty Woman, by Miss Pardoe, noticed, 249.

Cromwell, his picture drawn always by his enemies, 267; his boyhood, 271; his youth, 273; enters at Lincoln's Inn, 275; goes to Parliament, 277.

E

Ecclesiastes Anglicanus, reviewed, 46—74.

Elements of military art and science, noticed, 256.

Everett's Essays reviewed, 329—351; opposition to periodical writings, 331; Everetts review of M. Droz, 333; his Essay on the Sabbath, 336; his poems, 350.

Everetts Inaugural Address, noticed, 243.

F

Farmer's Library, noticed, 253.

Fichte, Memoir of him, noticed, 253.

Fuller, Miss S. Margaret, her Woman in the Nineteenth Century, 148.

G

German Literature, its powerful influence, 352.

Greek and Latin Languages compared, 376.

Gresley, Rev. W, his Treatise on Preaching, reviewed, 46—74; outline of the work, 63.

H

Hallek's Elements of Military Art and Science, noticed, 256; another review of it, 419—440. See War.

Heidelberg, by James, notice of it, 513.

Hewett's Few Thoughts, concerning the theories of High Churchmen and Tractarians, noticed, 248.

History, Study of, 128; the proper mode of studying it, 130; sources from which information is to be derived, ib; a particular portion only to be studied, 132; modern history, ib; influence of the reformation on it, 134; external history, 135; character of ancient and modern history, 138; internal history, 139; philosophy of English history, 140.

Homer's Iliad. See Munford.

I.

Imaginative Excitement, necessary to society, 75; and hence the popularity of works of imagination, 78.

Italy, 85; its various governments, 94; Piedmont, ib; Genoa, 96; Lombardy, ib; Venice, 98; Naples, 101; Tuscany, 105; Rome, 109; the Roman religion, its operation on the people, 116; literature of Italy, 120; the Italian ladies, 124; tendency of Italy is towards free institutions, 126.

L.

Luther's Life, by Michelet, noticed, 254.

M.

Madonna and Child, Barton's Poem of the, 118.

Memphis Convention, see Calhoun, J. C.

Mississippi river, Mr. Calhoun's doctrine of the, 413, 445.

Munford, William, his translation of the Iliad, reviewed, 145; sketch of his life, 2; circumstances under which the original was composed, 8; condition of the early Ionians, ib.; aid given to their poetry by their religion, 11; description of a Pagan sacrifice, 13; the question of Homer's personality, 15; character of his poetry, 16; comparison of the translations of Pope, Cowper and Munford, 21; Pope's translation too high colored, Cowper's faithful but rude, Munford's a medium between the too and surpassing both, ib.; illustrations of the excellence of Munford's version, 23; his annotations worthless, 37; quotations from the translation, 40; typographical execution of the work, 45.

N.

Nebular Hypothesis, account of it as a system of cosmogony, 227-242; the theory stated, 228; facts connected with our solar system, which illustrate it, 232; Mosaic account of the creation adapted to it, 241.

Nichol, Dr. J. P., his views of the architecture of the heavens, reviewed, 227-242.

O.

Onslow, reviewed, 75–85.

Oregon Territory, Twiss' history and discovery of, noticed, 250.

P.

Pictorial History of England, noticed, 253.

Pope's Homer, remarks on, 21.

Preachers, their character and conduct in the primitive church, 51; their ignorance, 55; sketches of English preachers, 57; Wiklif, ib.; Latimer, 59; books on the art of preaching, 62.

Pulpit, etymology of the word, 46; an impediment in the way of the christian orator, 48; qualities of pulpit eloquence, 72.

R.

Roman Literature, history of, 352; elements of the Latin language, 356; five periods of Roman literature, ib.; first, ib.; second, 357; third, 358; fourth, 363; the causes of its decline, 365; fifth, period, 370; its total decline, 373.

S.

Sabbath, history of its institution, 345;

Sermons, their qualities and constituents, 69; different kinds, 70; the argumentative, ib.; historical, 71; expository, ib.; hortatory, ib.

Silvio Pellico, Miss Sedgewick's account of him, 95.

Southern Journal of Medicine and Pharmacy, noticed, 351.

Spider, natural history of, 291; its anatomy, 295; maternal affection, 296; timidity of the male, 297; construction of the web, 300; flying spiders, a vulgar error, 302; construction of dwellings by the mygale and atypus, 303; of the argyroneta, 304; foresight of the sphex, 305.

Stearns, Rev. Sam. H., his life, noticed, 255.

Swedenborg, Emanuel, life of, reviewed, 302—329; his intellectual powers, 307; his birth, 308; his early piety, 309; his education, 310; his travels, 311; his appointment, 313; the period of his illumination, 318; lights in which his disclosures may be viewed, 320; extraordinary circumstances in his life, 322; his interview with the Queen of Sweden, ib.; with a merchant of Elberfield, 324; his announcement of the death of Peter III, 326; predicts the result of his voyage to Stockholm, ib.; and the hour of his death, 327; testimony of Kant, 328.

V—W.

Veto of the Harbor Bill, Mr. Polk's, 510.

War, its justifiableness, 420; should be prepared for, in time of peace, 423; a military profession necessary for this, 424; political appointments to the army injurious and unjust, 426; militia, valuable, 430; war not now conducted as formerly, 431; strategy, 433; an error in the military department of government, 434; fortifications, 436.

Ware, Rev. Henry, his works, noticed, 513.

Woman, the condition of, in different states of society, 147; her position exerts a reflective influence on the state of the society in which he lives, and the state of society on her condition, 149; her position among the Australians, 150; among savage tribes, 151; North American Indians, 153; Ancient Germans, 154; Chinese, 156; Greeks, 158; Romans, 160; influence of Christianity on her condition, 162; of the feudal system, 163; her present position, 167; examination of her temperament, 167; the power of her mind, 169; her true position, 170.